

Pointless Plates?

One day a young brachiosaurus went to look at a lake. He saw a brontosaurus walking through the water on scales from a stegosaurus.

“How did you get the scales?”

“I used to be a stegosaurus.” “Why did you change?”

“Because I wanted a longer neck. I like to paddle in deep water because it’s cool.”

“I have a long neck,” the brachiosaurus said. “I can paddle with you.”

The brachiosaurus walked into the lake but it got stuck in the mud because it did not have any plates. It died there.

The moral is everything is useful including apparently pointless plates.

“Really I don’t know what to do,” the horrible Tyrannosaurus Rex said. “There are no stegosaurus to eat. I like to chew on their scales. They are very crisp.”.

“Why don’t you plate up healthy snacks. You could use leaves and dry them in the sun. Then they would be crisp!”

The T-Rex tried that and made the first crisps.
He set up a shop and sold crisps in exchange for eggs so then he had eggs and crisps.

“Hit me with a feather, help me make up a name, and I will go into business.”

“Your name’s good enough, Big Mac!”

Once upon a time a T Rex tried to stop eating meat.

It saw the stegosaurus enjoying eating plants and it thought it would be great not to have to hunt for your food.

It tried to chew a long branch but it got stuck in its throat and it died.

The other T Rexes ate it and stayed carnivorous.
